With the 2019 release of their debut album, No Audio Dialogue will continue to add to their devoted fan base. The Dublin based trio have a steady stream of material penned by Stephen Walker (Saccade, The Nude). They demo at bass player Ciaran McCreary's (The Aunty) recording studio and put it all together live with Gary Vitagliano (Pods, Resolve, Gladiola) on drums. NAD have created a sound that takes its inspiration from indie rock, 90's post-punk and radio friendly guitar based pop.

At one of their early gigs, Robbie Malone (David Gray, Hot House Flowers/LIR) approached the band and was eager to produce them. Coming from similar musical backgrounds NAD and Robbie hit it off immediately and "Do you Hedgehog?" was tracked and mixed by Stuart Gray at his Jealoustown Studios under the watchful eye of Robbie as producer. "Do you hedgehog?" is a collection of 10 immediately catchy songs that are economic in arrangement and performance. From the very first listen the tracks get under your skin and you'll want to play them on repeat. Stand-outs are Stumble and Fall, All to Find, Hold On and Milk. There's no filler here though and they're all stellar in their own right. Next up they've a number of gigs in support the record and work has begun on a video for Stumble and Fall.
